Definable representations of algebraic groups

Adrien Deloro (Paris VI)

Logicians have their own approach to algebraic groups, which focuses more on the dimension than on the topology. They even generalize constructible sets and use so-called "definable sets" instead. One may then start studying group representations in the definable category. I shall discuss a basic result obtained with Gregory Cherlin on such a representation of PSL2.